The Peace Trust is driven by a group of volunteers who share a view that non-violent solutions to conflict will only be achieved when individuals and communities demand more tolerance, accepting and kinder behaviours—from their peers and leaders.

Support from individuals, service clubs, and community organisations is encouraged. Donations—Bequests—Sponsorships are accepted.

In the longer term the Trust will build a fund from which it can enable activities that help build mindfulness and understanding of the benefits of goodwill, acceptance and respectful problem solving.

TAMAR VALLEY PEACE festival

The concept of the Peace Trust was initiated by long-time peace activist Mrs Jean Hearn. Jean, now in her mid-nineties, was inspired by the late Tasmanian Governor Peter Underwood's 2014 Anzac Day address where he issued a challenge to all Tasmanians to "actively strive for peace on a daily basis and learn ways of resolving conflict without violence". He challenged us, in remembrance of all those who died or were damaged in war, to "do something, to learn how to create peace".

Peace, in this context, is not only about the conflict of wars: it is about our behaviour as citizens of local communities and global societies. It relates to the conflict and violence in our homes, workplaces and on our streets, and it is also about celebrating diversity.
