Mayor's Message

I am pleased to say the Launceston City Deal, which is 3 levels of government working together to make Launceston one of Australia's most liveable and innovative regional cities, is on track and meeting its commitments. You will have noticed work on the Brisbane Street Mall is beginning and development at City Square is progressing well: these are initiatives of the City Heart Project which is part of the City Deal.

There's a lot that's happening and changing in our City, but I'm pleased we're able to celebrate the city's past, as we've done in Civic Square and other projects, and to commemorate Launceston's history and achievements for future generations.

In other news, a report into the financial benefits of Hawthorn AFL matches in Launceston was recently released.

The PricewaterhouseCoopers report, states that the deal with the State Government was worth more than $20.4M in total direct expenditure into the Tasmania economy in 2017. Most of us have seen the activity in our City around each game day.

The report only reinforces the importance of the Hawthorn deal to Launceston and the wider Northern region, particularly during winter months when we don't see as many tourists.

These are exciting times and I trust that senior members of our community will enjoy the renewal Launceston is experiencing.

I would like to thank you and acknowledge the input that our senior citizens have made to consultation processes and all of the work that you have done for the benefit of our city.

World's oldest surviving beer - made new

The Queen Victoria Museum and Art Gallery (QVMAG) has partnered with the Australian Wine Research Institute (AWRI) and LION's James Squire Brewery to develop a beer from yeast found in a ship wrecked off Tasmania more than two centuries ago.

The Sydney Cove was a merchant ship travelling from India to the British Colony of Port Jackson when it was wrecked off Preservation Island in Bass Strait in November, 1797.

The Sydney Cove's contents included tea, rice and tobacco plus more than 30,000 litres of highly-prized alcohol. The icy waters of Bass Strait allowed yeast in these sealed bottles of beer to stay alive for far longer than any previously known yeast.

Following excavation of the wreck between 1977 and the 1990s, QVMAG obtained the ship's objects including beer bottles for its collection, many of which are now on display at Inveresk. Years later the contents in the bottles were re-examined and QVMAG worked with scientists at the AWRI to isolate the yeast. Using skills honed working with wine yeast, the AWRI identified its genetic make-up and found it was a rare hybrid strain which differs from modern ale strains. The yeast was then taken back to the laboratory where experimental brews were born and the journey to commercialise the product began.

Completing the final piece of the puzzle, QVMAG is excited to announce it has partnered with James Squire to produce a special limited edition beer made from the 220 year-old yeast, aptly named The Wreck - Preservation Ale.

Brewers at James Squire's Malt Shovel Brewery rose to the challenge of creating a beer from yeast that had a mind of its own. After some trial and error using modern brewing techniques to craft the centuries-old yeast, the team has delivered a Porter-style beer with hints of blackcurrant and spices, giving it a rich and smooth taste.

The Wreck - Preservation Ale will be available on tap at James Squire brew houses around the country from June.

Northern Suburbs Project is Underway

The City of Launceston has made a commitment in both the Greater Launceston Plan and the Launceston City Deal to develop a Northern Suburbs Revitalisation Plan (or NSRP for short) by 2018. The northern suburbs include Invermay, Mowbray, Newnham, Mayfield, Rocherlea, Waverley and Ravenswood.

The NSRP will be developed by listening to what people have to say about living and working in the northern suburbs, and, by working with all levels of government and coming up with ways to build upon existing assets. The purpose of the NSRP is to make living and working in the northern suburbs easier.

The NSRP will consider:

- Health and wellbeing
- Education
- Transport
- Housing
- Employment and economic growth
- Infrastructure and public spaces.

More information about the NSRP will be provided as work progresses.
